

MOZART: CONCERTO IN A, K. 213; "TURKISH"
BACH: CONCERTO IN A MINOR

NATHAN MILSTEIN, VIOLIN
WITH THE FESTIVAL ORCHESTRA, CONDUCTED BY HARRY BLEDCH

Program Notes by Harry Bledch

For the Mozart family the year 1773 was no very unusual one in other ways before and after this was the principal concert was given to Johann Wolfgang von Goethe in the concert hall of the Grand Canal in 1773. Within the concert of 1773, the year had been particularly distinguished by the presence of the great German poet, Goethe, who had been invited to give a recital of his own poetry at the concert. It was a very unusual event for the time, and it is not surprising that the concert was so successful. It was a very unusual event for the time, and it is not surprising that the concert was so successful. It was a very unusual event for the time, and it is not surprising that the concert was so successful.

The concert was a very unusual event for the time, and it is not surprising that the concert was so successful. It was a very unusual event for the time, and it is not surprising that the concert was so successful. It was a very unusual event for the time, and it is not surprising that the concert was so successful.

The concert was a very unusual event for the time, and it is not surprising that the concert was so successful. It was a very unusual event for the time, and it is not surprising that the concert was so successful. It was a very unusual event for the time, and it is not surprising that the concert was so successful.

