

Mussorgsky PICTURES AT AN EXHIBITION

(Revised by Maurice Ravel)
Chicago Symphony Orchestra - Fritz Reiner, Conductor

In the 1930's a series of artistic exhibitions swept through Russia. Amongst these were the famous "Exhibition of the Century" and others that had given to the world a picture of the life of the Russian people. It is a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people.

Promenade. A tall, thin, dark, which Mussorgsky called "Figure of the Russian artist." (Mussorgsky's picture is a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people.)

Bydlo. The title is a Polish word meaning "bull." (Mussorgsky's picture is a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people.)

Promenade. This is a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people.

Samuel Goldenberg and Schmuyle. This is a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people.

The Market Place at Kaluga. This is a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people.

Great Gate at Kiev. This is a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people.

Importance Notice. This is a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people, a picture of the life of the Russian people.

